

What is Business Continuity?

Put simply, business continuity is the key discipline that sits at the heart of building and improving the resilience of organisations. It identifies organisations priorities and prepares solutions to address disruptive threats.

Do I need to have a business continuity plan?

Organisations that have a business continuity plan are able to react to disruptions more positively.

By investing in Business Continuity, organisations take that first important step to ensure that their risks are identified, and plans are developed to address those risks.

What does a business continuity plan cover?

The plan is designed to cover those critical products or services that are essential for an organisation to continue to function during a disruption.

What sort of disruptions should it cover?

Anything that can impact on your business.

Covid-19 is an immediate example where a pandemic has affected almost every business and social group. Our Business Continuity Plans are designed to address the issues that your organisation may face. Each one is unique, designed to address your needs. Typical issues can include fire, flood, or natural disasters, I.T. outages, interruptions to the supply chain, loss of key staff or contracts or any other issue that could affect an organisations ability to continue to provide its products or services.

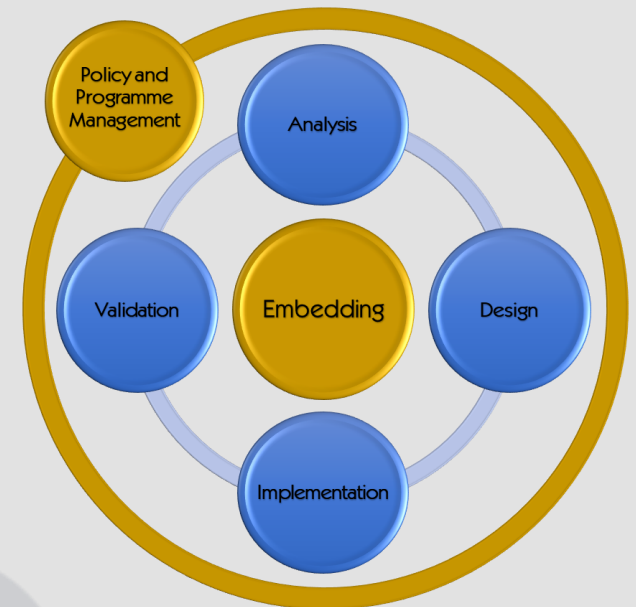

What are the benefits of a Business Continuity Plan?

The way that a business reacts when disruption or disaster occurs has a major impact on their future viability.

A business continuity plan helps to ensure that should an event or disruption happen, organisations are prepared to react to it. Pre-determined plans designed for you, help to identify threats before they occur and design a suitable response to enable an organisation to continue to deliver prioritised products and services.
